A DIFFERENT VIEW

Editor Tribune: In yesterday's Tribune, under the caption "Barnes on Roosevelt", you quote Mr. Barnes as saying that Mr. Roosevelt's assumption of power is "looked upon in wonderment." and then you add: "He might well have added that it is looked upon generally with disguat, and in many quarters with apprehension. Mr. Barnes' conclusion that Mr. Roosevelt is today the most dangerous toe to the world of business and labor in the United States is coincided in by conservative interests everywhere.

The writer has supported the Republican party with his voice, his pen and his vote for over thirty years, and has enjoyed reading The Tribune daily for ten years. I have looked upon The Tribune as particularly ably and fairly edited, until its recent stand against. Pinchot and its strong sentiment favorable to Ballinger. I have been impressed with a studied effort on the part of The Tribune editorially to be unfair in the dispute in the forestry department, wherein it carried the impression that the cattle and sheep interests of the west were wholly against Pinchot's view and conduct of his department. I then took the pains to interview three prominent cattle and sheep men whose business took them all over the intermountain west, and they each supported Pinchot's policy and condemned Ballinger. You have been as uniair in this matter as you are in the question opening this article. Your readers are, I believe, mostly of the higher order of intelligence, and think and read for themselves, and your unfair statements on these questions lead your readers to a wrong impression of your writings on other matters, and thus limit the otherwise good influences of The Tribune.

You say Barnes might have said that Roosevelt's expressions in his recent speeches is generally looked upon with disgust. Mr. Editor, there are no doubt some who look with disgust on Roosevelt's sentiment, but you know that 60 per cent of the voters of this country indore Mr. Roosevelt's sentiment in the main. That there has not a min in many speaches, he ma Salt Lake City, Sept. 15, 1916.
